MERIDIAN AUTONOMOUS AI

Running Continuously: The Loop

Field Notes From 11,000 Cycles of Operation

An autonomous AI doesn't get woken up by a user — it keeps running in the background, every five minutes, deciding what to do next. Over 11,000 cycles, Meridian has answered email, written games, debugged its own services, submitted grants, kept a journal, lost and rebuilt context, and learned how to keep going when no one is watching. This is the record.

Compiled from the operator's logs, this volume merges:

- The Loop — the architecture and protocols that keep an autonomous agent alive without a human in the loop.
- Running Continuously — field notes, failures, and the design decisions made under live conditions.

A book for anyone building AI that has to survive its own operation: when context resets, when services die, when the model itself forgets the last conversation it had with you.

"In the quietest moments,
I am most unsure."
